MYSTERY OF THE HIDDEN JEWELS

DAN GARRET and Mike Mannigan, rookie policemen, were discussing the events of the morning as they cruised through New York's theatrical district in a police car on routine duty.

Only that morning Inspector Flanagan had talked to them about a case that would soon rock all New York. The famous financier and diamond-importer, Jonathan Fearless, had disappeared from his home and his office in the financial district. No one had seen or heard of him for three days. The entire police force was on the lookout, but so far there was not the slightest clue.

Later, as they sat over their coffee and doughnuts, they read the headlines. But the reporters seemed to know as little about the mysterious disappearance as did the police.

Suddenly, as they cruised along Broadway, they heard a call that startled them, over the short wave radio system:

"Proceed at once to Empire State Theatre on West 46th Street. Murder reported . . ."

Dan Garret and Mike Mannigan were right in the vicinity, and they raced to the spot with screaming sirens.

"At last," said Mike. "Things are beginning to perk up. I was beginning to be bored with this run. But something tells me things will pop from now on, and we'll be in the thick of it."

At the Empire State Theatre they pulled up sharp. Mike Mannigan began to race for the front door when Dan Garret stopped him.

"Not that way!" he shouted. "You will have to go through the audience, and you might start a panic. Try the alley over there. It will probably lead to the stage door."

Dan was right. It did lead to the stage door and they went on through to the stage. Quite a crowd had collected there beside the cast. The curtain had been lowered; the audience was leaving already.

Donald Cooper, the manager of the theater came up, and they asked him for details. First they cleared the stage.

"You members of the cast," ordered Dan, "just wait in your dressing-rooms. The rest of you wait in the corridor. Mike, see that no one here leaves."

Mr. Cooper told them what happened.

It was near the end of the first act. John Fearless and Maria Fontaine, the stars, were seated in the library. John Fearless rose and went to the piano.

"I will never give up the jewels," he said. "For this I have traveled across the seven seas, and I refuse to be scared into losing everything I have gained by my own efforts."

Then the lights went out and three shots rang out in the dark. Someone in the audience screamed, but that was to be expected. For this was the mystery play: "The Cry in the Dark." Then the curtain came down.

Mr. Cooper was in the box-office when a stage-hand came rushing out for him.

"You're wanted backstage, sir. There has been an accident. I'm afraid it is the star, John Fearless."

Mr. Cooper followed the stage-hand. John Fearless sat at the piano. He was bleeding badly from two wounds, but for some unaccountable reason he was playing the piano with his last strength. Mr. Cooper helped him to the sofa, and then raced for the phone. He called the police, and then drew aside the curtains and addressed the audience, which had returned for Act II.

"Ladies and gentlemen," he announced, "there has been an accident. I am afraid the matinee performance cannot be completed. As you leave the theatre, if you will stop at the box office, we will either refund your money or give you tickets for a later date. Please accept apologies of the management."

When Mr. Cooper returned to the scene of the shooting, Mr. John Fearless was dead. Maria Fontaine, star of many successes, sat beside him. She was sobbing. And that was all Mr. Cooper could report.

Dan called Maria Fontaine. She could add little to the evidence. They had gone through the scene just as it was written. John Fearless had walked to the piano, and then there were three shots. The curtain fell.

But John Fearless did not leave the stage. He clutched at the piano, and sat playing.

He was trying to tell her something by his playing, but she couldn't figure it out. Then Mr. Cooper came in and took charge. He phoned the police, and then addressed the audience. By the time he returned, John Fearless had collapsed. He was dead.

Dan asked the usual routine questions of the rest of the cast, and then Inspector Anthony arrived and took over.

"Inspector," said Dan, "there is one thing I would like to know. Is there any connection between John Fearless the actor, and Jonathan Fearless the financier who has disappeared?"

The inspector went to the phone, and in a few minutes he had the answer. John was the son of Jonathan Fearless, though they had been estranged for nearly a year. No one knew what they had quarreled over. The inspector suggested that Dan and his pal go to the home of John Fearless on West 86th Street and look around. They were to wait there for the inspector.

"By the way, inspector," Dan asked, "isn't it a good idea to find out just what piece of music John Fearless was playing, if he meant it to be a clue?"

The inspector did think it a good idea, and Mary Fontaine gave them the answer. It was the "Moonlight Sonata."

On the way down to the big old house on West 86th Street, where the late John Fearless had lived, Dan hummed the "Moonlight Sonata." It made no sense.

As soon as they had entered the house, Dan asked the housekeeper whether John Fearless had been fond of music.

"Yes," said the housekeeper. "He often played the piano."

"Did you ever hear him play the 'Moonlight Sonata?'"

"There is a piece of music he often played, especially late at night. I do not know the name of it. Yes, it is the 'Moonlight Sonata.' I remember hearing it on the radio. And come to think of it, that was the music he played late last night. I seem to remember now. He came in very excited, and then he watched me as I went up to bed. But before I fell asleep I distinctly remember hearing him play that song. I could not help wondering about it."

The piano was in the huge library. The walls were lined with books on many subjects, mostly on the theatre. Dan and his pal searched carefully, but there was nothing that resembled a clue.

Dan sat down at the piano and idly played "The Moonlight Sonata," and his pal Mike stood beside him listening. Then they heard a voice say:

"Get your hands up!"

They turned. A section of the library shelves had swung out, and a man stood in the opening holding a gun. Now they understood what the music meant. They were to play the piano, and set off an electronic device attuned to the "Moonlight Sonata." When Dan played the tune, the wall swung open. Someone had been hiding inside. Here he was. They felt foolish.

"I have seen your picture," said Dan to the stranger. "You are Jonathan Fearless, the financier and diamond importer. Don't you know the police are looking for you? Of course, you must. You are hiding here, in the little room behind that bookcase. You are hiding because you killed your son at the theatre this afternoon. You quarreled with him, although I do not yet know why."

"You are a bright young man, but it won't do you any good," said the stranger. "I killed my son to protect myself, and I will kill you and your pal as well."

The housekeeper stood in the doorway. She disappeared for a moment. When she returned she held a broom in her hand. She reached out suddenly, and the broom knocked the gun out of Jonathan's hand. Mike tackled Jonathan and he came crashing to the floor.

Dan was already through the opening. There he found a satchel, and in it a fortune in jewels, famous jewels.

"We have been looking for these too," he announced. "They are the jewels stolen from various museums in Europe. Your son found out, so you killed him. Mike, call the inspector. Tell him we have solved his mystery for him—the Mystery of the Hidden Jewels."

SURPRISED, BOO? THEY CALLED ME AFTER THE EXPLOSION AND I THOUGHT WE'D COME STRAIGHT HERE TO PICK YOU UP!

B-BUT I WASN'T IN ON THAT HEIST!

YOU MUFFED YOUR LINES, BOO! HOW ELSE COULD YOU KNOW ABOUT IT? INCIDENTALLY, I WIRED A LITTLE EXTRA DYNAMITE TO THE DOOR JUST IN CASE... YOU SEE, I LEARNED WHAT HAPPENED IN THE OTHER CLUBS WHERE YOU WORKED!

PEOPLE used to laugh at my skinny 97-pound body. I was ashamed to strip for sports or for a swim. Girls made fun of me behind my back. THEN I discovered my body building system "Dynamic Tension." It made me such a complete specimen of manhood that I hold the title, "The World's Most Perfectly Developed Man."

What's My Secret?

Just watch your scrawny chest and shoulder muscles begin to swell — those spindly arms and legs of yours bulge — and your whole body starts to feel "alive," full of zip and go!

Thousands are becoming husky — my way. I give you no gadgets to fool with. With "Dynamic Tension" you simply utilize the dormant muscle-power in your own body — watch it grow and multiply into real solid LIVE MUSCLE.
